

Personal History Preservation

Information + Pricing

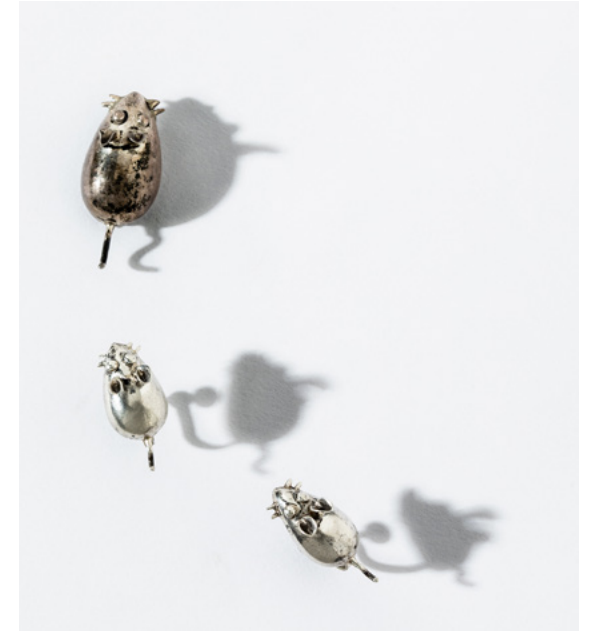

About
Personal history preservation is a little different for everyone.

Often times it starts with a story or a collection. Sometimes it's after the loss of a family member or before selling a family home. It's about preserving spaces, items, and moments that keep our loved ones alive in our memory. Each preservation session is about capturing a glimpse into who your family truly is.

I was raised on a ranch in SouthEastern Colorado amongst artists and storytellers and I have developed my own mix of both. The images seen here are of my family's history preservation. I've created artwork from the spaces and objects left behind by my ancestors. This is my way of remembering each of them and sharing their story for future generations to enjoy.

Kaylinn

ABOVE: THE COUPLE: Zita's earrings with a photo of her wearing them, Roy is following behind her in an old family album page, from the 1970s. At the time this photo was taken they had been married almost sixty years. THE RING: There's a family story about Great Grandma Zita hiding her diamond ring in a flour sack. The family has been searching for it for years. This is not the ring. That ring is still "safely" hidden..

ABOVE: BOOK & NECKLACE: Great Grandma's Botany for Young People book and one of her many necklaces. MICE: It is said that Great Grandma would often get ready in the car while driving. This included, much to the horror of her passengers, putting on clip-on earrings which required two hands. Her mice pin and earring set in varying states of polishing. RED GINGHAM: Great Grandma's nametag from the National Extension Homemakers Council in Hawaii in 1964, featuring a tiny pair of chaps.

We'll work together to establish a shot list based on your family's preservation needs and story. Along with working on location, I also have a studio in Atlanta's Reynoldstown neighborhood, where I can create custom artwork of collections. If you desire a different setup we can create a custom package that best fits your needs.
